the determinants of fertilizer consumption and its growth in tamil nadu 1. Introduction. Input subsidy programs (ISPs) are among the most contentiously debated of development issues in sub-Saharan Africa (SSA). 1 These government programs, through which farmers receive fertilizer (and in some cases seed) at below-market prices, were largely phased out during the 1990s because the emerging consensus was that they only weakly contributed to agricultural productivity ...

the determinants of fertilizer consumption and its growth in tamil nadu The linear approximation strategy is not without limitations. It was chosen over log-linear and log-log approaches since neither of those were found to provide a better fit with the data, and indeed most countries with significant input use have pursued relatively linear fertilizer-yield trajectories, as shown in Fig. 3. This linear relationship is somewhat at odds with the field-level ...
